FOUR MEN WHO BORE LINCOLN FROM FORD'S THEATRE NAMED

One of Them Who Survives Supplies the Missing Link in the Story of the Assassination of the President

By EARL T. CHAMBERLIN.

EVERY detail of the story of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln has been told except one. The identity of the men who carried the body of the stricken President from Ford's Theatre, the scene of the tragedy, to the quiet chamber of death in the Peterson house, on the opposite side of Tenth Street, has never been established. Now, however, after an exhaustive investigation, it is possible to supply the one link which heretofore has been missing from the chain of that evening's events.

On Good Friday night, April 14, 1865, four comrades-in-arms, on leave from Camp Barry at Washington, sat in the dress-circle or first balcony of Ford's Theatre. They were near the State box, which President Lincoln and his party occupied that night. Hearing a pistol shot, then a woman's screams, the four soldiers rushed into the box, where they found their Commander-in-Chief wounded and unconscious.

Army officers who were at the theatre took charge of the situation and ordered the four soldiers, who had so quickly appeared on the scene together, to lift the prostrate man and move him from the theatre. They carried him through the narrow corridor that led into the balcony, thence to the stairway leading to the street. Near the head of the stairs two other soldiers joined them and assisted in bearing the President across Tenth Street to the little brick residence of the Peterson family, where they laid him in the bed in which he died the next morning. Those four young soldiers, having done their simple duty, disappeared from the scene and hurried back to camp; their identity was lost, and it was only through a chance acquaintance who learned of my interest in Lincoln that I came upon the facts.

One of the soldiers who helped to carry the body of Lincoln from the theatre is still living. His name is Jacob J. Soles and he lives in North Versailles Township, Allegheny County, Pa., where he was born July 17, 1845. Three of his nine children are still living and he makes his home with one of them, Mrs. Laura Lefler. He was a coal digger all his life until he got too old to do such work. Several years ago he lost an eye in a mine accident. He is not the emotional or imaginative type and could not have made up the simple, straightforward story he told in several conversations. His statement and my subsequent investigations in the War Department and elsewhere in Washington and in other places form the foundation for the following narrative.

Their War Records.

During the last two years of the Civil War Soles was a member of Thompson's Battery C, Independent Pennsylvania Light Artillery, which from the Fall of 1864 until the following June was stationed at Camp Barry, where it had been sent as a part of the defenses in and about Washington. The battery had been in many of the fiercest battles of the war, including Antietam, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, and had been shot to pieces. When Grant reorganized the Union forces in the Spring of 1864 many replacements were made to bring the battery up to its normal strength. At that time Soles and three of his friends—Jabes Griffiths, John Corey and William Sample—became members of the battery. These men, from Allegheny County, Pa., had enlisted at Pittsburgh in February, 1864, and were later assigned to Battery C for permanent service.

The individual records of the four soldiers, examined at the War Department by courtesy of L. A. Rosafy of the Adjutant General's office, show that they were all present with their company every day from March until the last of June, 1865, when they were honorably discharged.

On the night of April 14 they obtained leave of absence to attend the theatre. What occurred there, so far as they were concerned, may be told in the language of Mr. Soles, as he related it to me:

Bill Sample, Jabe Griffiths and John Corey and myself, all of Company C, Independent Artillery, went to Ford's Theatre at about 7:30 or 8 o'clock. Lincoln was shot some time later—I can't give the hour accurately; I know the play had gone on for some time after we came in.

We four were up in the balcony; we were on the same side of the balcony that Mr. Lincoln's box was on; we were back in toward the back of the theatre, about fifteen feet from the box where he was shot.

We didn't know at first when we heard the pistol going off that it was in there, but they cried for help and we heard this woman crying and we four broke forward and rushed to the box, and we helped him down to the building where he was placed, in a little brick building standing across the street from Ford's Theatre.

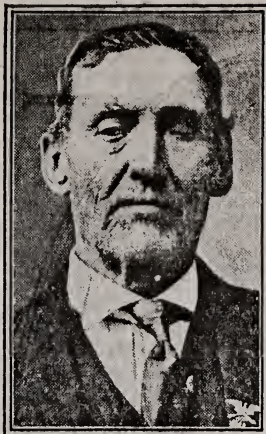

We four fellows carried him to the stairway in the theatre, then two others fell in and helped carry him. As we carried him out of the theatre, he was carried out flat, with his feet foremost; I was down at his feet with one of the fellows, and two men at his head, and the middle of him was sagging until the two others took him in the middle and we six carried him out.

We carried Lincoln out of the theatre and we had him out on the street about five minutes until we found a place to put him, and then they hollered out that is where he would be put. A young man directed us to the house, a young man that was not in soldier's clothes; he told us to take him to the brick house. We put him in a room on the first floor; we went back through a long hallway to about the middle of the building; there was a bed in that room and we laid him on the bed.

When we took him into the room we had to get out. The guard put them all out. They wouldn't let anybody in without it was a doctor or something. The street was jammed. You had to push a road through wherever you wanted to get to. We waited around until the doctors came out and said it was fatal and then we pulled for camp.

son's Battery C, Independent Pennsylvania Light Artillery, and the individual records of the four men, as found in the files of the Adjutant General's office, verify those portions of Soles's story dealing with their military service.

The records in the Pension Bureau confirm the details he related regarding the death of the three other men and their surviving families. An examination of the pension records disclosed the following facts: James Griffiths died at McKeesport, Pa., Jan. 18, 1898, leaving a widow, Minerva Griffiths, and several children; John Corey was drowned in the Allegheny River near Pittsburgh in April, 1884, leaving a widow, Mary Corey, and several children, the widow having died April 20, 1898; William Sample died in the McKeesport Hospital Feb. 25, 1898, as the result of burns received in a steel mill; he left a widow, Lydia J. Sample, now dead, and several children.

Mrs. Griffiths lives with her daughter, Mrs. Leon Jeffers, on Third Street, Beaver, Pa. In a recent interview she related some of her husband's war experiences and said positively that he was one of the soldiers who carried Lincoln from Ford's Theatre.

ATTORNEY AT LAW
UNIONTOWN, PA.

June 17, 1931.

Mr. Howard K. Terry,
9528 Wisteria street,
Bustleton,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Mr. Terry:-

I must apologize to you for not writing you sooner with respect to your letter of April 16, 1931, addressed to the Editor of the New York Times, and by them referred to me.

I am enclosing a sheet from the New York Times of Sunday February 8th, in which appeared my article on the four men who bore Lincoln from Ford's Theater. The source of my information, primarily, - Mr. Jacob Soles - was still living a few months ago, but I am not able to state that he is now alive, though I presume he is, as he was in good health at the time I last spoke to him. The other three men have been dead for some years. I have a lot of information gathered from the various families and from records and histories, etc., in addition to what appears in the Times article, which convinces me that the story is authentic, and just to talk to Mr. Soles is also quite convincing.

Your interest in the matter inspires me to inquire as to whether you are interested in Lincoln generally, because that would strike a most sympathetic chord. I have given a great deal of time and effort in study and travel and research regarding the life of that great American, and have found it all a great inspiration. It was through a friend of mine, who casually mentioned the fact that his father had known a man who helped carry Lincoln from Ford's theater, that I first learned of this story, which so far as I have been able to discover was never before told in complete form, and I followed the initial word with a very thorough investigation, the result of which, in abridged form, is embodied in the Times story.

If I can be of any further assistance to you, it will be a great pleasure for me to do so.

Yours very truly,

Earl T. Chamberlin

across the Potomac.

After the Confederate withdrawal, plans to send Battery C back into the field were evidently scrapped. The Official Records Organizational Listing of Troops in the Department of Washington, Twenty-Second Army Corps, for July 31st still shows Battery C as posted to Camp Barry.

Battery C Graduates a Large Class

Battery C's responsibilities as a veteran unit posted to the Light Artillery Camp of Instruction would naturally include training. That may explain why Bates shows that on January 12, 1865 Battery C transferred seventy-three men to the 204th Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers (also known as the 5th PA Artillery Regiment)—Batteries I, K, L and M. The majority of these men were mustered the previous August or September, but there were also some mustered early in 1864 and even a handful of veterans from as early as 1861. By March of 1865 Battery C's strength had dropped to five officers and one hundred forty-six enlisted men.

Battery C and President Lincoln

When Abraham Lincoln was assassinated at Ford's Theater, four members of Thompson's Independent Battery C were present and, with two other soldiers, carried the dying President across the street. According to a January 16, 1936 article in the Westinghouse Valley News, they were: Jacob J. Soles, John Corey, Jacob (Jabez?) Griffiths and William Sample.

Jacob Soles is quoted in a February 11, 1933 article in the Washington Daily News, as saying: "It was awfully still in the theater at that minute. Suddenly a shot cracked in the darkness. Mrs. Lincoln, I think it was, was the first to scream the President is shot! We were at Lincoln's side in a second. We lifted him up. He felt limp, as if all the fight had gone out of him. Guards cleared the aisles and we walked to the door and then directly across the street—the six of us carrying him as gently as we could. We carried him across the street and up the steps of the house. Someone directed us to a room, where we put Lincoln in a bed."

Jacob Soles explained that the four artillerymen were late leaving the barracks that night and arrived after the first act was over. They were seated on the same side of the isle, about fifteen feet from the presidential box, and so, were quick to reach President Lincoln. Jacob Soles also notes some interesting difference from the usual historical accounts: While carrying Lincoln, he claimed he heard the President ask in a whisper "Where are they taking me?" Jacob Soles also said John Wilkes Booth did not catch his heel or a spur in a flag that draped the presidential box and fall to the stage—as in the story most people have heard. Soles stated that there was no drape on the box.

A great leader died and Battery C, with the nation, mourned an irreplaceable loss. The Washington Daily News article noted that Soles was an orderly and was frequently assigned to carry messages to the White House. He said President Lincoln would often nod or smile at the young messenger. Jacob Soles lived to be 90 and died in Turtle Run, PA—the last Civil War Veteran of his community.

Mustered Out in June of 1865

Thompson's Independent Battery C, Pennsylvania Volunteer Light Artillery was ordered to Pittsburgh, leaving its last active post, on June 20, 1865. Home again, Captain Thompson and his men were mustered out on June 30, 1865—thus ending a long, honorable and distinguished service its nation and its state.

The History of Pennsylvania Volunteers, 1861-1865—Volume V by Samuel P. Bates records that from 1861 through 1865, 320 men passed through the ranks of Battery C—not counting the men of Battery F who served under Captain Thompson during the temporary consolidation, or men listed in Bates (11) that “never joined.” Here is how they fared:

124 (39%) Mustered out on June 30, 1865 (One was absent in the hospital)

76 (24%) Transferred to Other Units:

-73 to the 204th Regiment, PA Vol. on January 12, 1865:

(17 to Battery I, 204th Regiment)

(18 to Battery L, 204th Regiment)

(18 to Battery M, 204th Regiment)

(1 to unspecified, 204th Regiment)

(3 to the Veteran Reserve Corps)

72 (22%) Discharged:

THE MEN WHO CARRIED PRESIDENT ABRAHAM LINCOLN FROM FORD'S THEATER AFTER HE WAS SHOT.

(written and composed by)
Mary Kalamas

It was on Good Friday Night, April 14, 1865, when President Abraham Lincoln, sitting in the state box with his party in the Ford's Theater, Washington, D.C., was shot down by John Wilkes Booth. Details of the assassination, and subsequent turmoil are matters of record. But now, after 120 years, it is possible to supply the missing link to the chain of that evening's events.

On the night of April 14, 1865, four comrade-in-arms on leave from Camp Barry, Washington, sat in the dress circle, or first balcony, at Ford's Theater, very near the state box that President Lincoln and his party occupied that evening. Hearing a pistol shot and a woman's screams, the four men rushed into the corridor leading to the box. Meanwhile, Major Rathbone, the President's guest that night, was attempting to remove a board which Booth had used previously, to deliberately jam the door. Once opened the Major called for doctors only, to be admitted. A twenty-three year old Assistant Surgeon of the United States volunteers, Dr. Charles A. Leale, was admitted and immediately took charge of the situation. While examining the President whom he found slumped over in his seat, Dr. Leale saw the soldiers peering in from the corridor and ordered them in, where they found their Commander-in-Chief wounded and unconscious. They were ordered to lift the President from his chair and lay him on the floor. Meanwhile, Dr. Charles Taft, Senior Surgeon to Leale, was lifted to the box from the stage below, and immediately assisted the doctor. They were further assisted by a Dr. F. A. King, who was also in the audience. When Leale had exclaimed that the President's wound was mortal and it was impossible for him to recover, one of the soldiers got sick, while the others removed their uniform caps. The doctors decided that the President had to be taken from the Theater to another place. Dr. Taft then ordered the four soldiers, all members of Thompson's Battery C, Independent Pennsylvania Light Artillery, to carry him. Two formed a sling under the upper trunk, and the other two held the thin thighs as they carried him feet first through the narrow corridors. As they were coming to the stairs leading to the street, a squad of troopers came to life and preceded the dismal party clearing the crowds aside. Two additional soldiers at the top of the stairs, seeing the men's need for assistance, quickly grabbed the President's mid-section which was sagging, and slowly descended the stairs to the street. The little party pressed through inch-by-inch, the mob catching a glimpse of dark figures straining in careful haste, as they bore Lincoln across 10th street. The procession seemed to be interminable. When they got across the street the party saw a man with a lighted candle motioning them, and led them to the home of William Peterson at 453, 10th Street. Lincoln was carried up the steep steps and into the middle of the house, where he was placed in a bed. Then Dr. Leale ordered an officer to clear everybody out of the room and post a guard at the front stoop.

Who were the Union troopers who carried their stricken President from Ford's Theater, the scene of the tragedy, to the quiet chamber of death in the Peterson's home on the opposite side of 10th street?

THOMPSON'S BATTERY C, INDEPENDENT PENNSYLVANIA LIGHT ARTILLERY

The troops for Battery C, were recruited at Pittsburgh, with service for three years, and were organized on the 6th of Nov., 1861, under the command of Captain James Thompson.

The Battery participated in many of the fiercest battles of the war, including, Antietam, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg, and had been shot to pieces.

In the spring of 1864, a sufficient number of recruits had been added to bring the Battery up to its normal strength, and in the fall of that year and until the following June, were stationed at Camp Barry, Washington. While there, they served as a defense unit in and about Washington, until the 20th of June, 1865, when Battery C, was ordered to Pittsburgh, where, on the 30th, it was mustered out of service.

LOUIS LAMBERT BEAUBIEN; born, Detroit, MI, April 22, 1822; son of Lambert and Felicity (Moran) Beaubien. (The well known Beaubien street in Detroit was named for Lambert in 1835; also was a soldier in the war of 1812. This families ancestry dates back to the mid 1600's, Quebec, Canada, to Rene Cullerier, whose descendants settled in the Detroit area in 1721). Louis, married first time in Detroit, June 30, 1846, to Susan Ann Visger, and they had four children. Susan died Nov. 7, 1853. Second marriage was in Ecorse, Feb. 16, 1858, to Miss Rachel Ann Bourrasse. They had eleven children. Occupation, Carpenter before and after the war. Resided: Ecorse, Wayne County, MI. Enlisted: age 40, Co. F, 24th Michigan Volunteer Infantry, August 13, 1862. Transferred, May 15, 1864, Co. H., 12th Regiment Veteran's Reserve Corps. Stationed in Washington, D.C. remainder of the war. Honorably mustered out with original regiment, the 24th Michigan Infantry, at Detroit, June 30, 1865. Died, at his home, June 3, 1911, Ecorse, buried Ecorse Cemetery.

*Note - While on detached service at Brigade Headquarters, in Racon Falls, VA, July 1863, Louis, while chopping wood for some officer's, accidentally cut off his right big toe when the handle of his axe came off. He was treated by a 7th Wisconsin Regimental Surgeon, and sent to Carver Hospital in Washington, D.C. where he remained for several months. On Jan. 1, 1864, upon request, was sent home on a thirty day furlough because his house had been partially burned, and he needed to get his affairs in order. He was sent to St. Mary's Hospital in Detroit for the month, then sent back to Carver Hospital, and soon after was transferred to the Veteran's Reserve Corps.

TWENTY-FOURTH MICHIGAN INFANTRY VOLUNTEER REGIMENT

The Regiment was mustered into the United States Service on August 15, 1862, for three years service under the command of Colonel Henry A. Morrow. On October 9, 1862, it became part of the "Famous Iron Brigade", consisting of four other western regiments, the 2nd, 6th, and 7th Wisconsin, and the 19th Indiana, and were well known for being the hardest fighting men in the Union Army, recognized by friend and foe, by the black "Hardee" hats they wore.

The 24th Michigan saw a great deal of active field service and took part in many of the renowned battles of the war, including Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Wilderness, and at Gettysburg, where they sustained 82% of their casualties. One thousand men and thirty-seven officers left Detroit in August, 1862, and returned in June, 1865, with less than two-hundred of the original men and six original officers.

During Lincoln's funeral at Springfield, IL, the solemn duty of performing the martial rights were assigned to the 24th Michigan, which also formed his funeral escort.

In researching my family ancestry, I found that my great, great grandfather, Louis Lambert Beaubien, of Ecorse, MI, was a soldier during the Civil War and a member of Company F, 24th Michigan Infantry, and that he was one of the men who assisted in carrying President Lincoln from Ford's Theater after he had been shot. This knowledge prompted a further search for the names of the other men involved, but to no avail.

One day in the Spring of 1984, a strange series of circumstances led me to a Mrs. Helen Horvath, 59, from Trenton, MI, whose grandfather, Jabez Griffiths, was also involved in carrying out the wounded President. She showed me an original article dated, Feb. 12, 1931, from a PA newspaper near Pittsburgh, "The Beaver Daily Times" which was passed down to her by her grandmother, Minerva Griffiths. The article told the story about four men from "Thompson's Battery C, Independent Pennsylvania Light Artillery, who helped carry Lincoln from Ford's Theater. Upon reading it, I finally learned how Louis L. Beaubien had taken part in this event. I decided then that this was a story that had to be told.

With the information obtained from Mrs. Horvath on these four men, I was able to send for each individual's Military and Pension Records in Washington, D.C. I then wrote to the Historical Society of Western PA and received information on Thompson's Battery C, Independent Pennsylvania Light Artillery, as well as the list of names of each soldier in the Battery and their enlistment dates. The information obtained on each of these men was taken from these records as well as from other information among Helen's and my personal collections.

The preceding story about the Assassination of Lincoln, was composed from information out of the 1931 article, as well as from two excellent books written about the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, namely "The Day Lincoln was Shot" by Jim Bishop, and "The Death of Lincoln" by Leroy Hayman.

According to the 1931 article, while being interviewed as the sole survivor of the original group of four, Mr. Soles, explained that his Captain gave him four tickets to attend the evening performance of "Our American Cousin", and that he was accompanied by three other members of his company. The article further stated that although quite old, Mr. Soles still lived at his home at 223 Greensburg Pike, in North Versailles Twp., in Allegheny County, and could recall the events quite well. The following story was quoted in his own words.

"Bill Sample, Jabez Griffiths, John Corey, and myself, all of Company C, Independent Pennsylvania Light Artillery went to Ford's Theater at about 7:30 or 8:00 o'clock. Lincoln was shot some time later. I can't give the exact time accurately, but sometime during the play, we were up in the balcony - same side of the room as Mr. Lincoln's box was. We were toward the back of the theater about 15 feet from the box where he was shot. We didn't know at first when we heard the pistol going off that it was in there, but they cried for help, and we heard this woman crying, and we four broke forward and rushed to the box and we helped him down to the building that he was placed, in a little brick building standing across the street from Ford's Theater. We four fellows carried him to the stairway in the theater then two others fell in and helped carry him. As we carried him out of the theater, he was carried out flat, with his feet foremost; I was down at his feet with one of the fellows, and two men at his head, and the middle of him was sagging, until the two others took him in the middle and we six carried him out. We carried Lincoln out of the theater and we had him out in the street in about five minutes until we found a place to put him. And then they hollered out that it is where he will be put. A young man directed us to the house, a young man that was not in soldier's clothing. He told us to take him to the brick house. We put him in a room on the first floor; we went back through a long hallway to about the middle of the building; there was a bed in that room and we laid him in that bed. When we took him into the room we had to get out, the guard put them all out, they wouldn't let anybody in without it was a doctor or something. The street was jammed, we had to push a road through wherever you wanted to get to. We waited around until the doctors came out and said it was fatal and then we pulled for camp."

The information on Mr. Beaubien was taken from his obituary from the Detroit Free Press dated, June 4, 1911, which stated that he was on Sentry Duty at a nearby barracks, when a messenger dashed up with the announcement of the shooting, and his regiment went at a "double quick" to the theater. He assisted in carrying President Lincoln out of Ford's Theater, and stood guard at the house when the President died.

These six soldiers, having done their simple duty disappeared from the scene; their identities were lost, and it was not until 1931 when the four men from PA were re-discovered. Now a fifth man has been identified. Possibly, from this article and subsequent articles, the identity of the sixth man will yet be learned.

The article that appears in our SHARING column this issue is titled "The Men Who Carried President Abraham Lincoln From Ford's Theater After He Was Shot".

This article was written and composed by one of our society's members, Mary Ellen Kalamas. Mary's timing for release of this article is perfect inasmuch as this is the month we, as a nation, celebrate Lincoln's birthday.

Let me tell you a little about the person who has written this article:

Mary Ellen (Labadie) Kalamas was raised and resides in Lincoln Park, MI. Daughter of Philip & Pearl (Lynn) Labadie. She is married to George F. Kalamas, Jr., and they have three children, ages: 2, 5, and 6. She began interest in genealogy in the Fall of 1980. She is current Recording Secretary of the DRGS.

INDEPENDENT BATTERY C. (THOMPSON'S.)

THE troops for this battery were recruited at Pittsburg, to serve for three years, and were organized on the 6th of November, 1861, with the following officers: James Thompson, Captain; John P. Barry and James Stephenson, Lieutenants. Soon after its organization it was ordered to the front, and during the fall and winter succeeding, was carefully drilled. It was assigned to the Second Division, commanded by General Ricketts, of the Third Corps, General M'Dowell, which subsequently became part of General Pope's army. When M'Clellan, with the major part of the Army of the Potomac moved to the Peninsula, in the spring of 1862, M'Dowell's Corps remained behind to cover Washington, and did not advance further south than the Rappahannock. When the safety of Washington became endangered by the threatening attitude which the rebel army assumed after the seven days' battle before Richmond, M'Dowell's Corps was pushed out to meet and check the rebel advance. Banks met a powerful division of that army under Jackson and Ewell, at Cedar Mountain, towards the close of the day, on the 9th of August, and a most sanguinary battle ensued. M'Dowell's corps came quickly to the support of Banks, Thompson's Battery arriving on the ground just at dark. As it was moving into position, the enemy opened upon it with canister. The infantry had formed between it and the enemy, preventing the use of canister, and Captain Thompson, accordingly replied with shells from his two twelve-pound howitzers, which, in a short time silenced the rebel fire. With his Parrott guns, he directed a hot fire upon the woods where the enemy held his supports. The fire was kept up until far into the night. On the following day, the enemy sent in a flag of truce, for permission to bury his dead, and afterwards retreated across the Rapidan. With Buford's Cavalry Brigade, the battery advanced to Robertson's River, on the 12th, and skirmished with the enemy, putting his cavalry to flight.

On the 21st, the battery was brought down to Rappahannock Bridge, and ordered to cross to the south bank, to the assistance of Captain Mathews, of the First Pennsylvania Artillery, who was being hard pressed by the enemy. As soon as Captain Thompson could get his guns into position, Mathews retired, and fire was opened, skirmishing being kept up during the entire day. On the following day there was occasional firing, but without loss. At daylight on the 22d, the battery was ordered to retire across the railroad bridge, fears being entertained for its safety, on account of a sudden rise of the water. The howitzers moved with Hartsuff's Brigade, and effected a crossing; but as the Parrotts were about to follow, the enemy made his appearance, and opened upon them. Captain Thompson replied, causing the enemy to frequently change his position. Soon two brigades of infantry made their appearance, and upon these Thompson turned a part of his guns, keeping up a fire also upon the enemy's artillery. At the moment when the ammunition was exhausted, an order was received to retire across the bridge, which order was successfully executed. The enemy came rapidly up, and soon made his appearance on the little eminence which had just been abandoned; but a few shells from the howitzers sent him back.

Jackson finally turned the right of Pope, and came in upon his rear. To check Longstreet, who was following hard upon the footsteps of Jackson, and if possible divide the rebel army, Ricketts was ordered to Thoroughfare Gap. On nearing the Gap, Captain Thompson found the road through the woods obstructed. By the aid of the pioneers of the Ninth New York, the obstructions were cleared away, Captain Mathews having taken position with his battery in advance. General Ricketts ordered Captain Thompson to cross the creek with two guns, if practicable, and take position on the opposite side. This was effected, and a fire opened upon the enemy at three hundred yards distance. The skirmishers, who were in advance, were soon after obliged to retire, leaving the guns exposed to a severe fire from the rebel sharpshooters, posted in trees and behind rocks. Seeing this, an order was sent to Thompson to retire with his guns, which he succeeded in doing, with the loss of two men wounded, one missing, and one horse killed. The division retired at night towards New Market, the battery acting as rear guard upon the march.

During the fierce fighting at Bull Run on the 30th, the battery was ordered into position on the right of the line occupied by the corps, and at ten A. M., opened a sharp fire from the Parrott guns upon a rebel battery, posted in rear of woods opposite the centre, which was engaged in throwing shells with deadly effect. Captain Thompson had not been long in action, before the enemy brought a six gun battery to bear upon his right flank, subjecting him to a severe cross-fire. Seeing that his position was untenable, and that the enemy's infantry was preparing to charge for the capture of his guns, he withdrew and took position on the right of the line. At half-past three in the afternoon, the battery was again brought into action on the right of the artillery, on a line at right angles with Captain Mathews' Battery, with the design of delivering a cross-fire upon the rebel batteries. Soon the enemy's infantry was descried, advancing from the wood, and charging upon the guns on the crest in front. Captain Thompson at once opened with grape and canister upon these advancing lines, and twice their colors were shot down. But the Union batteries were soon afterwards obliged to retire, their supports having been driven away, and in passing through the woods in his rear, Captain Thompson was flanked by the enemy's infantry, who opened a galling fire upon him, killing several of the draught horses, cutting down and capturing the drivers, and compelling him to abandon one Parrott and two howitzer guns, with limbers and horses. At the Stone Bridge across Bull Run, Captain Thompson took position with one of his guns, and in conjunction with guns of other batteries hurriedly collected, covered the retreat, until all the Union forces had passed, when the bridge was destroyed by Colonel Kane, of the Bucktails. He then retired with the three guns which he had saved, to Centreville. The loss was ten wounded, a part of whom fell into the enemy's hands. Lieutenant Stephenson was among the severely wounded. On the evening of September 1st, the battary was engaged in the fierce fighting at Chantilly, where it was supported by the Bucktails.

At the close of the campaign, the battery retired to Washington, and was immediately put upon the march through Maryland, to meet the enemy, who had crossed the Potomac, receiving four ten-pound rifled guns from the Second Maine, at Rockville, while on the march. In the battle at South Mountain, on the 14th, it was engaged, but sustained no loss. On the morning of the 17th of September, the battery was brought into position upon the field at Antietam, and went into action upon the right of the line, with Duryea's Brigade, replying to a rebel battery upon the right front. Finding that a battery upon the left had gotten the exact range of his guns, Captain Thompson turned his fire upon it. "Immediately afterwards," says Captain Thompson, in his official report, "I was ordered to advance, when I selected a little knoll in the centre of a corn-field, and coming into action, I observed the enemy's infantry advancing from the woods to our right. I at once directed my fire on them, using three, two, and one and a-half second fuse as they advanced, but was unable to use canister, as many of our men retiring, wounded, got in front of my guns. Finding at length, the remnants of the brigade retiring—their ammunition exhausted—and the enemy already in the corn-field, within seventy-five yards of the battery, I retired to the rising ground in the centre of the grass-field, about two hundred yards in rear, and continued my fire. But finding that all of our division had gone, and that my men and horses were falling fast, I limbered up and moved off, just as fresh troops coming up, obliqued across the front of the battery into position for our relief." One gun had to be abandoned for a few moments, on account of the loss of horses, until other horses could return for it, when guns and limbers were brought off in safety. The loss was eleven men wounded, one mortally, and thirteen horses killed.

In the re-organization of the army which took place under General Burnside, the battery was attached to the Second Division of the First Corps, with which it participated on the 13th of December, in the battle of Fredericksburg. At nine o'clock on the morning of that day, the corps having previously crossed the Rappahannock at the lower bridge, the battery was ordered into position in a corn-field to the right of the division, and opened fire upon the enemy, in the edge of the wood to the right, thus preventing him from flanking the division as it went forward. But a few rounds had been delivered, when the battery was ordered to advance closer, and to the right. From the new position, a rapid fire was directed upon the enemy's infantry, though it was subjected to a galling cross-fire from the enemy's guns. To these, Captain Thompson refused to reply, until the infantry of the division had been compelled to fall back, when he turned upon them and continued his fire until ordered back, succeeding in the meantime, in exploding one of the enemy's ammunition chests. The loss was two men wounded, and two horses killed. One gun, and one gun carriage were disabled.

When General Hooker commenced his Chancellorsville campaign, towards the close of April, 1863, the First Corps was again sent to the lower crossing of the Rappahannock. Captain Thompson took position with his battery at daylight on the 29th, near Purdy's Dam, to cover the troops while laying the pontoons, and the march in crossing. The fog was dense, but at seven A. M., twelve rounds were fired upon parties of the enemy, fourteen hundred yards away. The following day was rainy, and quiet prevailed, until a little past five P. M., when the enemy opened with a battery of twenty-pounder Parrott guns upon the Union infantry, and Thompson promptly replied, and though subjected to a cross-fire, continued the contest until dark. The morning of the 2d of May, opened clear, and from eight, until half-past nine A. M., Captain Thompson engaged the enemy's batteries. At eleven, he moved with the corps for the support of Hooker at Chancellorsville, arriving at the front, and taking position on the right of the army line at two A. M.; but at eleven was relieved and ordered to join the reserve artillery. On the morning of the 5th, it recrossed the river, and took position to cover the pontoon bridge, which was threatened by the enemy, who had approached from below. At daylight of the 6th, the enemy was discovered throwing up earth-works on an opposite eminence. Fire was opened upon him, to which he answered with two twenty-four-pound howitzers, and several rifled guns posted to right and left. With the aid of Knap's Battery, Captain Thompson succeeded in blowing up the rebel caissons, silencing their guns, and compelling the gunners to run to cover of woods, leaving their pieces on the field. When the army had recrossed the river, and the last of the pontoons had been taken up, the battery retired and returned to camp. The loss was one man killed, and three wounded. Three horses were also killed.

In this battle, Captain Hampton, who commanded Independent Battery F, was killed, and his battery seriously disabled. So much reduced in number had both batteries become, that on the 3d of June, a special order was issued consolidating the two under command of the senior officer, Captain Thompson. It was then directed to report to General Tyler, in command of the artillery reserve of the Army of the Potomac, and was by him assigned to McGilvery's Brigade. At five o'clock on the afternoon of the 2d of July, the second day of the battle of Gettysburg, the reserve artillery having come up in rear of the lines at Little Round Top, Colonel McGilvery ordered Captain Thompson to advance with his battery to the support of General Sickles, who was already engaged. It was accordingly brought into position at the angle of Sickles' line, in the Peach Orchard on the Emmettsburg Pike, two guns facing to the west, and four to the south, and for the space of an hour was desperately engaged with the enemy's infantry and artillery. The enemy then made a determined advance, driving back the Union infantry, and leaving the battery without supports, at the same time capturing one of the guns facing to the west. The Union infantry, however, soon after rallied, and the gun was saved. The battery was then withdrawn a short distance, and again brought into action; but the pressure became too great to withstand, the enemy gaining ground rapidly, and it again retired with the loss of one gun. The loss in this brief struggle was one killed, nine wounded, and four missing. Captain Thompson had one horse killed under him, and eighteen horses of the battery killed or wounded. During the night, horses were supplied in place of those lost, and at five o'clock on the morning of the 3d, it was again brought into position, on the left centre of the general line of battle, with battery K, Fourth United States, on its right, and Fifteenth New York, (Hart's,) on its left. The ground at this point was low, and the enemy's guns on the commanding position in front and to the left, bore heavily upon it. But this was a vital part of the line and had to be defended. During the progress of the fierce artillery duel in the afternoon, the battery suffered severely, but held its ground, and def-antly answered shot for shot. The loss on this day was fourteen wounded. Among these were Captains Thompson and Irish, and Lieutenants Stephenson, Hazlett, and Miller, the latter mortally. Special mention was made by Captain Thompson, in his official report, of the gallant conduct of Sergeant Thomas Brown. Of private Casper E. Carlisle, he says: "When the four lead horses of one of the guns were killed, one wheel horse badly wounded, and drivers also wounded, he assisted me to disengage the traces of the dead leaders, under a heavy fire of musketry, (in the action of the 2d instant,) and mounting one of the wheel horses, took the gun off the field, thereby saving it. I recommend that a medal be granted him for his conduct on this occasion, and subsequent good conduct on the 3d instant." Colonel M'Gilvery, says in his official report: "In conclusion, I feel it my duty to state, that the officers and men of my own brigade, and other batteries that served under me, during the two days' battle, behaved in the most gallant manner. * * * On the 2d of July, when the battle raged most furiously, Thompson's, C and F, Pennsylvania Battery, contested every inch of ground, and remained on the field to the very last."

The battery was afterwards engaged in the affairs at Mitchell's Ford, on the 15th of October; at Mine Run, on the 27th of November, and at Morton's Ford, on the Rapidan, on the 6th of February, 1864, but sustained only trifling loss in either.

In the spring of 1864, a sufficient number of recruits had been received, to renew the organization of the two batteries, which was accordingly effected, and on the 5th of April they were ordered from Camp Hancock, near Brandy Station, where the command had been stationed during the winter, to Camp Barry, Washington, to re-fit and equip for active duty. They were, however, retained in the defenses north and south of Washington, and in the neighborhood of Harper's Ferry, until the 20th of June, 1865, when battery C was ordered to Pittsburg, where, on the 30th, it was mustered out of service.
